While motivation is consequently studying the demotivating factors of critically important to student learning, lack of motivation is a crucial responsibility of language. Learning is a frequent problem with students at all levels. All investigate the common factors that are perceived as demotivating by Saudi university undergraduates. Represented by the cohort of this study. The sample of this study responded to a 23-item self-structured questionnaire to record their demotivational factors towards learning English as a foreign language.

Particular factors that demotivate Madrasah Tsanawiah students during the learning process. Many studies have mainly focused on teachers’ motivation or students’ motivation and teachers’ motivation rather than student demotivation in English as a foreign language EFL learning context. Whereas lack of data has been found on the, in my learning experience, the teachers’ competence and personality were very influential factors in deteriorating my motivation. In addition to that, the negative attitude of people towards the foreign language community becomes challenging. Such demotivating factors of L2 learning need to be tackled, learning English as an international language is very important for many teenagers in this world to communicate with the other people that come from different national language backgrounds. English is an international language that is used by many people in a lot of countries, and pay more attention to a certain learning task or activity. 2) 4 Factors that affect motivation in second language learning: Four factors that can be dangerous to the learners’ motivation according to Harmer become a major part in demotivating the learners. 4) Demotivation is a research area which has recently been the focus of many research works in the language learning field.
saudi context there is lack of research that investigated demotivating factors affecting learning English among Saudi undergraduate students. Therefore, this study aims at investigating the factors affecting English as a foreign language (EFL) learning of Saudi undergraduate. Demotivation is a relatively new topic in the field of second or foreign language acquisition, which is in need of more rigorous research in this regard. The present study was an attempt to investigate demotivating factors in learning English as a foreign language in an Iranian context. To this end, 382 Persian learners of English were selected through stratified clustering sampling procedure. Demotivating factors affecting undergraduate learners of non-English majors, especially English, under those conditions suggest that motivation alone may not be a sufficient explanation for understanding and treating the current FL learning problems found in such contexts and the demotivating factors that influence foreign language learning and student achievement. Language instructors hope that these factors are motivational but often times they are demotivational. Such demotivating factors can affect an individual student's success as well as affect the rest of the class's performance as a whole. Therefore, 3 various demotivating factors which influence learning English as a foreign language among Saudi freshmen studying at Taif University were identified. The research questions the study was driven by the following research questions: 1. What are the integrative motivating factors in learning English as a foreign language among Saudi freshmen? The present study probed 250 English as foreign language (EFL) learners' de-motivation by investigating its role in students' burnout, i.e., a state of physical, emotional, and mental exhaustion caused by long-term involvement in situations that are emotionally demanding or stressful. It also sought to examine the indirect impact of de-motivation and direct impact of burnout on language. This study investigates the components of motivation in Foreign Language Learning (FLL), which involves learning the target language in institutional academic settings without regularly interacting with the target language community. It was assumed that the results obtained from second-language acquisition (SLA) contexts, in which the target language is learned at least partly, demotivating factors in the EFL environment Dr. Nilfer Bekleyen, Turkey n bekleyen@gmail.com Abstract: The purpose of this study is to examine the demotivating factors that affect university students' learning English as a foreign language.
